- implement emergency procedures – evacuation in case of fire or other significant incident;
- engage and consult with employees on day-to-day health and safety conditions and provide advice and supervision on occupational health;
- provide information, instruction, training and supervision as is necessary to ensure, so far as is reasonably practicable, the health and safety at work of employees;
- allocate sufficient resources to enable the Health and Safety Policy to be effectively implemented;
- make continual improvement of the management of health and safety an integral part of our daily activities and actions;
- set and periodically review health and safety objectives and performance, and to improve in light of any legislative changes and/or needs of the organisation;

It is the responsibility of all our employees to promote and visibly demonstrate a positive safety culture based on shared values, beliefs and expected behaviours.

We recognise the ever-changing obligations required by health and safety legislation and will periodically review this policy and the associated health and safety procedures to ensure that it remains fit for purpose in the protection of employees and anyone else affected by our acts or omissions.
